STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES

THIS APPEAL presents a question of law: Can an appeal be taken to a district court from a decision by a justice court granting a Temporary Protective Order (TPO) for stalking or harassment, after the TPO has expired?

The District Court, in concluding the negative, reasoned that (1) absent statutory authority, there is no right to appeal; and (2) the TPO having expired, the appeal would be moot. The Adverse Parties, Appellants in the matter, believe that both of those arguments are incorrect, inasmuch as (3) there is sufficient authority to permit the appeal; and (4) the appeal is not moot, given a contemplated action for malicious prosecution by the Adverse Parties.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

1. APPLICANT, who is Respondent in this matter, sought and obtained TPOs from Austin Justice Court against the Adverse Parties. (Gallegos v. Marking and Fleming, Austin Justice Court, Case Nos. 09 PO 002, 003, filed 8 August 2009; cited for completeness, but documents not required for ARGUMENT and not in APPENDIX) Adverse Parties moved to dissolve the TPO. A hearing was held, the TPO was modified but not dismissed. After expiration of the TPO, Adverse Parties went to file an appeal to the Sixth Judicial District Court, but the Austin Clerk refused to file the Notice of Appeal.

2. Adverse Parties filed an action in the Sixth Judicial District Court, requesting (APPENDIX, page A-1) the District Court to docket the matter as an appeal, and seeking a Writ of Mandamus (APPENDIX, page A-8) compelling the Austin Clerk to take steps necessary to perfect the appeal. (Marking and Fleming v. Gallegos, Sixth Judicial District Court, Case No.

105 CV 9953, filed 17 Sept. 2009) Adverse Parties noted (APPENDIX, page A-4) that, given a 106 contemplated action for malicious prosecution, the appeal would not be moot. The District
107 Court (APPENDIX, page A-12) granted the petition for Writ of Mandamus, but concluded that, 108 absent statutory authority, there was no possible appeal.

109 3. We note that the basis in justice court for the TPO was NRS 200.591. (APPENDIX,

111 4. Adverse Parties moved (APPENDIX, page A-17) to amend judgment under Rule 59,
112 citing additional authority. The District Court (APPENDIX, page A-23) reaffirmed its decision, 113 adding the additional reason that, given the expiration of the TPO, the appeal was moot.

114 5. Adverse Parties filed a Notice of Appeal to this Court. However, the Lander County
115 clerk indicated (APPENDIX, page A-25) that the District Court had decided that “this matter
116 cannot be appealed to the Supreme Court, as this is not the way to proceed with this matter.”
117 The clerk did not forward the Notice of Appeal to this Court.

118 6. Concluding that the District Court may have viewed the District Court action as an 119 appeal from Justice Court, hence not appealable to the Supreme Court, Adverse Parties 120 petitioned for a Writ of Mandamus from this Court, to compel the District Court to hear the 121 appeal from the Justice Court. (Marking v. Sixth Judicial Distr. Ct. and Gallegos, Nevada, 122 Case No. 55539, March 2010) The petition was denied, but this Court in its opinion indicated
123 that an appeal to this Court from the District Court action was proper. Eventually, the Lander 124 County clerk forwarded the Notice of Appeal to this Court.

125
126 ARGUMENT
127

128 7. JCRCP are authoritative. The JCRCP are authoritative, and derive their authority
129 from the Supreme Court, which in turn derives its rule-making authority from the Legislature, 130 which takes its authorization from the Nevada Constitution.

131           8. “The District Courts... also have final appellate jurisdiction in cases arising in 132 Justices Courts...” (Nevada Constitution, Article 6, §6.1) “The Legislature shall also prescribe 133 by law the manner, and determine the cases in which appeals may be taken from justices and 134 other courts.” (ibid., §8)

135           9. The Legislature, in turn, has delegated this authority to the Supreme Court:

136           NRS 2.120 Rules.

137           1. The Supreme Court may make rules not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws 138 of the State for its own government, the government of the district courts, and the 139 government of the State Bar of Nevada. Such rules shall be published promptly upon adoption and take effect on a date specified by the Supreme Court...

140           2. The Supreme Court, by rules adopted and published from time to time, shall regulate 141 original and appellate civil practice and procedure... in judicial proceedings in all courts 142 of the State..., Such rules shall not abridge, enlarge or modify any substantive right and 143 shall not be inconsistent with the Constitution of the State of Nevada. Such rules shall be published promptly upon adoption and take effect on a date specified by the Supreme Court...

145           10. Pursuant to this mandate, the Supreme Court adopted the JCRCP in 1959:

146           The 1951 legislature authorized the Nevada supreme court to prescribe rules to regulate 147 civil practice and procedure. (See NRS 2.120.) Existing statutes were deemed rules of 148 court, to remain in effect until superseded... [T]here being a recognized demand for the 149 adoption of rules of civil practice in the justices’ courts based upon the Nevada Rules of Civil Procedure, the supreme court appointed an Advisory Committee, consisting of the undersigned, to submit a draft of rules... Final recommendations of the committee were submitted to the court on March 23, 1959, and adopted by the court. (Preface to JCRCP)

150
151           The vesting of the rulemaking power in the Supreme Court by the Forty-Fifth 152 Legislature (1951)... provided the authority under which, by adoption of simplified rules of practice and procedure, the Supreme Court could greatly improve the administration of justice in the state... (Charles M. Merrill, Chief Justice, 23 July 1959, ibidem)

154           11. “These rules govern the procedure in the justice courts in all suits of a civil 155 nature... They shall be construed and administered to secure the just, speedy, and inexpensive
156 determination of every action...” (JCRCP 1)

157           12. These rules are applicable to proceedings under NRS 200.594, which are 158 recognized as civil actions by the statutes: “...justice courts have jurisdiction of the following 159 civil actions and proceedings and no others except as otherwise provided by specific 160 statute: ... (q) In any action pursuant to NRS 200.591 for the issuance of a protective order 161 against a person alleged to be committing the crime of stalking, aggravated stalking or 162 harassment...” (NRS 4.370, emphasis added)

163           13. Accordingly, JCRCP are authoritative, and applicable to Justice Court proceedings
164 involving TPOs pursuant to NRS 200.591.

165
166           14. Expired TPO represents a final order. There is no authority permitting the 167 resurrection or modification of an expired Protective Order. After expiration, all questions 168 brought before the justice court in the application have been decided. “A final judgment in an 169 action or proceeding is essentially one that disposes of the issues presented in the case, 170 determines the costs, and leaves nothing for the future consideration of the court.” (Alper v.
171 Posin, 77 Nev. 328, 363 P.2d 502, (1961))

172           15. We note, however, that there is authority under NRS 200.594.2 to modify an 173 unexpired protective order, so there is a question whether the date of final judgment is the 174 date of the last order granting or denying the TPO, or, if granted, the date of expiration of the 175 TPO. We submit that the date the order becomes final ought to be the date of expiration of the 176 TPO. Although the question of the exact date of finality is not relevant to this appeal, some 177 clarification from this Court might be useful for other cases in the future.

179           16. Authority for an appeal. Appellants acknowledge that “An aggrieved party does 180 not have the right to appeal, unless it is expressly granted by statute or rule.” (Alper v. Posin)
181 However, in this case, the judgment is appealable, because it is final, and because the action
182 commenced in the Justice Court, an appeal is allowed by JCRCP 72A(b)(1).

183           17. “An appeal may be taken [f]rom a final judgment in an action or proceeding
184 commenced in the court in which the judgment is rendered.” (JCRCP 72A(b)(1)) This rule 185 makes no exceptions for protective orders or for any other special kind of orders.

186           18. Indeed, such an exception would be in derogation of the Nevada Constitution.
187 “The Nevada Constitution [in Article 6, Section 6] proclaims that district courts have final 188 appellate jurisdiction in all cases arising in justices' courts...” (Lippis v. Peters, 112 Nev. 1008, 189 921 P.2d 1248, Nev. No. 26575, (1996), emphasis in the original) In Lippis, Nevada held that 190 JCRCP 106, denying appeals from summary evictions, was unconstitutional; that rule (JCRCP 191 106) has subsequently been repealed.

192           19. In Lippis, the Nevada Supreme Court continued: “JCRCP 106 is also violative of 193 article 4, section 21, which provides that ‘all laws shall be general and of uniform operation
194 throughout the State.’ There is no reason why parties to landlord-tenant law suits should be 195 denied the right of appeal, while all other justices' courts' litigants are allowed to exercise this 196 right. Henceforth, tenants who have been summarily evicted from their homes by order of a 197 justice's court, will have the right of direct appeal to the district court in order to seek 198 correction of any erroneous judgments that might have been issued by a justice's court.”
199 (Lippis, at 1011)

200           20. It is hard to see why the same reasoning would not also apply to litigants in cases
201 arising out of NRS 200.594. Indeed, when Lippis came before the Supreme Court, JCRCP
202 106, which was part of the JCRCP, had been previously approved by the Supreme Court itself.
203 It was challenged and was struck down. In the instant case, there is not even such a rule or 204 statute which prohibits what Appellants seek, so denial of the right to an appeal would be 205 unfounded.

206           21. In fact, when it said that “all other justice court litigants are allowed to exercise 207 this right” of appeal (Lippis, emphasis added), Nevada was implying in 1996 that litigants in 208 NRS 200.591 cases already had, in 1996, a recognized right to appeal to district court.

22. Interpretation of NRS 200.591.4. The district court reasoned that, since NRS 200.591.4 grants the right to an interlocutory appeal for an extended order, but does not grant any other right to an appeal, either for TPOs or for extended orders, then no such other appeal rights exist. We submit that this thinking was incorrect: it is erroneous to conclude that the grant of one right takes away another right.

23. The right to an interlocutory appeal is not equivalent to the right to an appeal from a final judgment. Although interlocutory appeals are available when authorized by specific rule, statute, or judicial policy, they are in most other cases generally discouraged. (Hallicrafters Co. v. Moore, 102 Nev. 526, 728 P.2d 441, Nev. No. 17387 (1986))

24. We submit that the correct interpretation of the statutory permission for interlocutory appeals (NRS 200.591.4) from extended protective orders is to expand the right to appeal, rather than to limit the rights to those explicitly granted. In other words, merely because an interlocutory appeal is allowed by the statute for one reason, does not preclude appeals from final judgments involving TPOs or extended orders on other authority. The statute does not reduce the rights granted by JCRCP 72A; rather, it expands them.

25. Interlocutory appeals usually require the showing of some special condition, such as irreparable harm, which would occur absent the appeal. Although the question of interlocutory appeals is not brought before this Court in this appeal, we believe that interlocutory appeals are available without statutory authority when one of those special conditions adheres. Ordinarily, for example, upon showing irreparable harm, an interlocutory appeal might lie with the district court from an order granting or denying a TPO or extended order. However, under NRS 200.591.4, there is an additional right to appeal an extended order, regardless of whether irreparable harm is shown.

26. The matter is not moot. Although a TPO might have expired, the rights of the 235 litigants are still contingent upon proper adjudication of the request presented by the 236 application, and therefore an appeal is not moot. In particular, a wrongly-granted TPO may 237 give rise to an action for malicious prosecution, abuse of process, or other claim.

238 27. One of the element of malicious prosecution is “termination [of the previous 239 action] in favor of present plaintiff” (Black’s Law Dictionary, Fifth Edition, citing Palermo v.
240 Cotton, Mo. App., 525 S.W.2d. 758 at 764) Once the TPO proceedings are terminated, the 241 action becomes res judicata, and errors in the proceedings cannot be revisited in a subsequent 242 case. Therefore, the rights of the adverse party in a TPO action, to file a subsequent action for 243 malicious prosecution, hinge on the correct outcome of the TPO action itself. When errors are 244 made in the judicial court, the only opportunity to correct those errors is on appeal.

245 28. This is especially important, given the abbreviated nature of the proceedings. An 246 adverse party may have no warning of the action, and may have inadequate time to prepare a 247 proper defense. By the time the TPO has expired, in other civil actions a hearing would not 248 likely have yet been held. The opportunity for error is greater than in most other civil matters, 249 so an appeal is all the more important.

250 29. A search of Nevada cases has found no directly applicable decision relating to 251 mootness in the context of a derivative action for malicious prosecution. However, an expired 252 wrongful restraining order is analogous to a wrongful lien which has already been removed. In 253 such a situation, it was held in Utah that “This court has stated that an issue only becomes 254 ‘moot when ‘the requested judicial relief cannot affect the rights of the litigants.’” [...]
255 Because Winters may request relief [...] for the alleged wrongful lien on his property, a 256 request that, if granted, will affect both his and Schulman's legal rights, this claim is not 257 moot.” (Winters v. Schulman, Utah Ct. App., Case No. 980242-CA, (1999))

258 30. The rights of the litigants in the derivative action will be affected by this issue.
259 Accordingly, it is not moot.

260 31. Furthermore, although the contemplated action for malicious prosecution was

261 brought to the District Court's attention in the Motion to Docket Appeal, it was inappropriate 262 for the District Court to rule on the question of mootness until the appeal itself takes place. In 263 order to reach a proper decision on whether or not a particular appeal is moot, the District
264 Court should consider the arguments framed in the appeal briefs, and not make a cursory 265 judgment without all of the salient facts as shown in the record, and law as argued in the 266 briefs.

268 32. Exception to mootness doctrine. Regardless of whether the issues are held to be 269 moot, they fall under an exception to the mootness doctrine.

270 33. This Court has recognized an exception to the mootness doctrine:

272 Even when an appeal is moot, however, this court may consider it when the matter is 273 capable of repetition, yet evading review. <sup>[FN7]</sup>

274 ...
275 FN7. Traffic Control Servs. v. United Rentals, 120 Nev. 168, 171-72, 87 P.3d 1054, 1057 276 (2004) (recognizing that the “capable of repetition, yet evading review” exception to the 277 mootness doctrine applies when the duration of the challenged action is “relatively 278 short,” and there is a “likelihood that a similar issue will arise in the future”).

279 -- *University and Community College System of Nevada v. Nevadans for Sound
280 Government*, 120 Nev. 712, 100 P.3d 179, (2004)

282 34. The prerequisite conditions described in Traffic Control Services, and affirmed in 283 University and Community College System of Nevada, exist here: the issues are capable of 284 repetition, yet evading review. The issues are questions of law, not specific to this case: the 285 Justice Court made significant errors of law in handling this matter. The challenged action is 286 “relatively short”, only thirty days, and there certainly is a likelihood that additional actions under NRS 200.591 will be brought before the Justice Court in the future. The issues are easily capable of evading review, since the District Court regards NRS 200.591 actions as being “unappealable”. In fact, they are not only capable of evading review, but quite 287 successful at doing so, apparently for decades: NRS 200.591 was added in 1989, and Nevada 288 case law appears nonexistent.

289 35. Therefore, when repeatable issues are raised, even if the matter itself might 290 otherwise be moot, justice court actions involving TPOs, as other justice court actions, should 291 be heard on appeal in the District Court.

292

293 36. Libel and slander. An unjustified application for a TPO can be tantamount to an 294 unsubstantiated accusation of harassment or stalking. Were it not for the privileged nature of 295 court documents, such an unsubstantiated accusation would be libellous or slanderous. When 296 such an unsubstantiated application is made in conjunction with other similar but unprivileged 297 acts of libel or slander, if the adverse party as victim were to to make a case for libel or 298 slander, there is likelihood that a successful application for a TPO would be used as a defense 299 by the applicant.

300 37. The law holds slander of one's moral character as actionable. Slander per se does 301 not require the proof of damages needed by other slanderous accusations. Should not the law 302 consider defense of one's reputation to be important enough to allow an appeal by the adverse 303 party to attempt to clear his or her name?

304 38. The serious nature of the accusations by an applicant may, perhaps appropriately,
305 lead a justice court to err on the side of caution and safety and grant a TPO to forestall 306 possible future harm to the applicant. (This is not in the record here, but is in the record of the 307 corresponding lower court case.) Other civil process allows time for discovery, calling 308 witnesses, and other mechanisms to protect both defendant and plaintiff from inaccurate
309 portrayals to the court of the incomplete body of evidence which might be readily at hand.
310 The absence of such mechanisms, combined with a lack of potential accountability coming 311 from the inability of a party to appeal a justice court's decision granting or denying a TPO, 312 can lead to an unfair and unjust outcome.

313           39. Indeed, although this appeal regards law and there are few facts in evidence in the 314 underlying district court case, there is ample anecdotal evidence in the public domain that 315 TPOs are sometimes used as “hit and run” or “drive by” tactics against spouses, especially in 316 domestic disputes; they also seem to be used in the same way in instances of workplace
317 harassment. The need for an efficient mechanism to protect genuine victims of harassment
318 and stalking is compelling. Equally compelling, however, is the need for a subsequent review
319 of those mechanisms, in the form of an appeal, to prevent or correct abuse of the system.

322   CONCLUSIONS
323

324 APPELLANTS RESPECTFULLY SEEK FROM THIS COURT an order holding that

325           Decisions made in justice courts granting protective orders under NRS 200.591 are 326 appealable to district courts; and

327           Further, notwithstanding the expiration of such TPOs, those appeals are not moot, 328 given the possibility of subsequent derivative actions for malicious prosecution; and 329           Further, a showing of a significant issue which is repeatable but easily capable of 330 evading review may, by itself, justify an appeal notwithstanding mootness.
